US Representative Rosa DeLauro will kick-off the film by leading a casual and intimate conversation with kids about the work being done in Congress to strengthen food safety legislation, improve school lunch nutrition and help families eat healthy and stay healthy.

What's On Your Plate? Follows two 11-year-old city kids, Sadie and Safiyah, as they take a close look at food systems in New York City and its surrounding areas. The girls talk to each other, food activists, farmers, storekeepers, and their families in their quest to understand the food's journey to our mouths. Shown through the eyes of children, the film is fun and lively, while at the same time packed with important information.
